However, in reality, because of a scarcity of raw materials and manpower in a quick deteriorating Germany, this was not the case. One of the few successful prototypes was the Messerschmitt Me 262 – the world's first jet fighter. It is troublesome to think about the sense of surprise that will have to have been felt by the Allied soldiers when first witnessing the 262. Many had heard rumours of Hitler's wonder machines, however right here was one in motion. With its Junkers Jumo 004B-1 turbojets, it put any Allied fighter to shame and made the propeller-powered planes seem like relics from a bygone period.
